the 'information' and 'communication' fields, and the 'information science' field.

The 'information science' field is the most general, and includes both the 'information' and 'communication' fields. It is the most abstract, and is the most theoretical of the three fields.

The 'information' field is the most concrete, and is the most practical of the three fields. It is the most applied, and is the most operational of the three fields.

The 'communication' field is the most intermediate, and is the most balanced of the three fields. It is the most integrated, and is the most comprehensive of the three fields.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2010 (Office of National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has identified the need to develop a new paradigm of care for the ageing population, one that is based on the concept of 'active ageing'. This paradigm is based on the idea that ageing is a process, not a state, and that the goal of care should be to promote the health and well-being of older people, rather than to simply manage their decline.

The Department of Health (1999) has identified a number of key areas for action in order to achieve this paradigm. These include: (1) promoting the health and well-being of older people; (2) ensuring that older people have access to the services and resources they need; (3) ensuring that older people are able to participate in the decisions that affect their lives; and (4) ensuring that older people are able to live in their own homes and communities.

The Department of Health (1999) has also identified a number of key areas for research in order to achieve this paradigm. These include: (1) understanding the needs of older people; (2) understanding the barriers to older people's participation in decisions; and (3) understanding the impact of ageing on health and well-being.

Dedication

To the good ship John Rogers, which has carried passengers over the calm and stormy seas for many years, and which has — through disappointment, defeat, victory and joy — resounded with the songs and shouts of its many hundreds of passengers, we, the Treasure Chest Staff, dedicate this 1950 Treasure Chest.

PRINCIPAL J. L. PURDY

This is your book of memories. The activities chronicled and pictured here will be remembered all your lives. Most important to you as you leaf through the pages is the answer to these questions: What has been your part in these activities? Was it honorable? Was it constructive? Will it make you a better citizen, one who will take an active and pleasurable role in community life? If so, your time has been well spent and you can remember with pride as well as pleasure your years at Rogers.

For Ben . . .

Born—June 5, 1932

Died—February 16, 1950

When some young loved one dies, we ask why. Why did it have to be him, so young, so full of life, with so much ahead of him. We cannot know the why. All we know is that at the Senior Breakfast table one well-remembered laugh will not ring with ours, only an echo of what might have been. One tall figure will not march down the aisle in June; one blond head will not bow with ours at Baccalanreate.

But painful as death is, how much better it is to have had a short time to love, laugh, and cry, to know the wild thrill of just being alive, than never to have lived at all.

the 1990s, the number of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia has increased in the United Kingdom (Meltzer 1998). The prevalence of schizophrenia in the United Kingdom is estimated to be 1.2% (Meltzer 1998).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The United Kingdom has a number of government departments and agencies that are responsible for the provision of mental health services. The Department of Health is responsible for the provision of mental health services in England. The Department of Social Security is responsible for the provision of mental health services in Scotland. The Department of Health and Social Services is responsible for the provision of mental health services in Northern Ireland.

The Department of Health has a number of policies and strategies that are aimed at improving the lives of people with mental health problems. The Mental Health Act 1983 is a key piece of legislation that governs the provision of mental health services in England. The Mental Health Act 1983 sets out the principles and objectives of mental health services and provides a framework for the provision of mental health services.

The Mental Health Act 1983 has been amended a number of times since it was first enacted. The most recent amendments were made in 2003. The amendments were aimed at improving the protection of the rights of people with mental health problems and at improving the effectiveness of mental health services.

The amendments to the Mental Health Act 1983 have been widely welcomed. They are seen as a significant step forward in the provision of mental health services in England. They are seen as a way of ensuring that the rights of people with mental health problems are protected and that the effectiveness of mental health services is improved.

The amendments to the Mental Health Act 1983 have been implemented in a number of ways. The most important changes have been made to the provisions relating to the detention of people with mental health problems. The amendments have introduced a number of new safeguards for people who are detained under the Act.

The amendments have also introduced a number of new provisions relating to the treatment of people with mental health problems. The amendments have introduced a number of new safeguards for people who are treated under the Act. The amendments have also introduced a number of new provisions relating to the provision of mental health services.

The amendments to the Mental Health Act 1983 have been widely welcomed. They are seen as a significant step forward in the provision of mental health services in England. They are seen as a way of ensuring that the rights of people with mental health problems are protected and that the effectiveness of mental health services is improved.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased by 1.2 million (Office of National Statistics 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people in the community. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for older people, which sets out a vision for the future of older people's services. The strategy is based on the following principles:

- Older people should be able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible.
- Older people should be able to access the services and support they need to live independently.
- Older people should be able to participate in the decisions that affect their lives.
- Older people should be able to live in a safe and secure environment.

The strategy also sets out a number of key objectives for the future of older people's services, including:

- To ensure that older people have access to the services and support they need to live independently.
- To ensure that older people are able to participate in the decisions that affect their lives.
- To ensure that older people live in a safe and secure environment.

The strategy also sets out a number of key actions for the future of older people's services, including:

- To ensure that older people have access to the services and support they need to live independently.
- To ensure that older people are able to participate in the decisions that affect their lives.
- To ensure that older people live in a safe and secure environment.
